Iubire ca in filme (Romanian edition) (2016) In 2013, the young Romanian filmmakers Adela Popescu and Dan Bodeianu released their first feature-length film, The Cripples Will Rise Again. In this film, they were the first to explore the problem of "cripples" in a Romanian context, and their film was immediately hailed as a masterpiece that opened up the conversation in Romania and abroad about the question of disability. Their second feature-length film, Iubire ca in filme, is a continuation of this critical and visionary work, addressing the same theme, from a different perspective. This documentary explores two old, abandoned residential institutions and their inhabitants, who – despite having full mental capacity – are still institutionalized and therefore unable to meet the demands of the outside world. This film is part of the African Museum of Film and Video's current series, "Tropics". Coming together to discuss the 2016 Romanian Film Selection: This panel discussion will be moderated by Adi Parvan, Director of the African Museum of Film and Video. Having seen the film, I can only agree with this assessment. There are several ways in which this film is quite impressive. The first and, I believe, most important one is its visual creativity. Some of the most beautiful and interesting shots were selected, are executed and executed masterfully. The film is also extremely well-paced, which may be difficult to achieve in a full-length feature-film, but is only more of an achievement here. Another thing I like is the fact that, from the very beginning, the film is a conversation between the characters, and we are invited to participate in it. In this film, the filmmakers don't direct the audience – they are the characters' interlocutors. Therefore, when we watch the film we are inevitably guided and prompted by the dialogue – a dialogue that the film itself is continuing after the end of the film. The protagonists of the film, as they talk to us, invite us to think about their problem, their situation and their relationship to society. The plot of 82157476af
